MONTHLY REVIEW

Worldwide stock markets have consolidated during February following accumulated increases since the beginning of the year. The European stock exchange, where we basically have our investments, continues to behave better than the American exchange as a result of a better-than-expected economic situation, low global exposure to Europe by investors and attractive valuations. The European stock market continues to price at a significant discount compared to the American one.

On the macro side, inflation shows a clear resistance to drop, and economic data continue to show strength, which conditions the decisions of central banks that depend heavily on the evolution of these variables. China's reopening also boosts global growth by further complicating central banks' pause in interest rate hikes.

Regarding the portfolio, on the buy side, we have built a position in the Spanish pharmaceutical company, Rovi, whose activity focuses on two areas: (1) The production and sale under license of owned and third-party pharmaceuticals (2) The filling and packaging of third-party products in the injectable, vial and oral segments. The company has recently positioned itself with its own technology in the field of long-lasting injectables with a product for schizophrenia called Okedi and another phase I product for hormone treatment in breast cancer. We see a clear opportunity in the stock at current levels, as the price fell sharply over the past year following the reduction of 2023 goals due to lower expected sales for the Moderna vaccine and the delay of Risvan's (Okedi in Europe) approval for the US. However, the rest of the business continues to grow with strength and with high profitability so it is predictable that growth will be strong again from 2023 which we see as a year of transition.

On the sell side, we have sold the entire position in the excellent French company Bureau Veritas, having reached our target price.
