MONTHLY REVIEW

December has been slightly positive for Lierde, in absence of the traditional "Christmas rally," against the slight falls of the Stoxx 600 index.

A truly atypical year has ended due to the strong performance difference among stock markets, sectors and companies. Correlation among stocks of the American S&P stood at 25-year lows and the flow of funds to the US reached a 20-year high compared to outflows in the rest of the stock markets. Only 31% of the companies were able to beat the S&P 500 index, three-decade lows, and 33% of its market cap was concentrated in only 7 securities (7 magnificent). We expect that in 2025, stock markets return to normal and the correlation between companies begins to increase. In the past, when correlation levels have resembled those of 2024, there has been a sharp reversal in the subsequent two years with 65-70% of companies beating the indices.

Regarding performance, the year has been very positive for US equities, mediocre for European equities and negative for small companies with most small cap indices ending negative. Small caps close the year at extreme valuation levels, with the Stoxx Europe Small 200 at a P/E of 11x vs 19x of the American Russell 2000. From our point of view, this is the place to be in 2025. In Lierde, at the end of the year, we have 57% in companies of less than €10 billion in market cap.

Geographically, France with a -2.9% profitability has been the worst performing market in Europe because of the political uncertainty. In Lierde, we have around 18% of the portfolio invested in French companies, which has also contributed to Lierde's worse performance against the market. Looking ahead to 2025, this market should perform better, once it seems that the risk of new elections begins to subside.

S&P 500 now compounds two consecutive years with increases above 20%. Everything is possible with Trump, but looking back at history, for 2025 S&P 500 should moderate the gains and be limited to single digits in the best case scenario.

In any case, nobody knows what 2025 will bring. New problems may appear and some of the issues that harm Europe will be solved. Therefore, it is important to be invested in quality companies that generate value over time and successfully face the problems that appear. In this sense, our current portfolio points to a value creation of +13% for 2025, which should lead us to a NAV of at least 155 euros per share by the end of year 2025.
