MONTHLY REVIEW

2025 has been a volatile year with two very distinct halves. The so-called "Trump Liberation Day," marked by the imposition of tariffs in early April, triggered a sharp market correction, with declines of around 15%, reaching annual lows on April 9. Following these declines, Trump reacted by pointing to unilateral renegotiations of tariffs with each country, which led to a turning point and a historic V-shaped recovery. As a result, 2025 ended with high double-digit returns.

The de-escalation of trade tensions, mainly with China, the solid performance of quarterly earnings reports, and the support of central bank monetary policy—including the Federal Reserve—have been the main drivers of the year. Tariffs ultimately increased to an average level of around 18%, but their impact on companies and the economy has been more limited than initially expected.

On our side, we ended the year with a return of 15.9%, in line with the European market excluding dividends and only 0.9% below the historical valuation highs reached in October (€14.03). In the first days of 2026, we once again surpassed previous all-time highs, reaching a net asset value of €14.18.

At Lierde, we invest in companies rather than markets, and 2025 has once again been a year of strong index performance. Many of the companies and sectors that have shown exceptional performance in 2025 do not meet most of the criteria we require for our investments. Numerous companies that are part of the indices trade at unsustainably high valuations simply because they belong to the benchmark index, making them particularly vulnerable. This implies that passive investing currently carries a higher level of risk than in other periods in the past. In contrast, smaller companies that are not part of the most widely followed indices trade at historically low valuations and are significantly undervalued.

Looking ahead to 2026, a reversal of this trend should begin to take place, which puts Lierde in a very favorable position to once again deliver a strong year of returns for its investors. The estimated value creation of our companies stands at around 12% for 2026, so annual returns should once again be in double digits.

Regarding the portfolio, we have initiated a position in the German company Rational, the global leader in equipment for the foodservice industry (catering, restaurants, etc.), with a global market share above 50%. The industry in which it operates grows at around 4% annually as a result of strong growth in out-of-home food consumption, increasing urban populations, and the expansion of the middle class in emerging markets. Rational grows well above the sector (8% on average over the last 20 years) with high margins (25–26%) thanks to its leadership and technological innovation. The share price fell sharply (-20%) in 2025. U.S. tariffs impacted the company's margin by 2 percentage points, as the company chose not to offset the effect through price increases in order to improve its competitive position. However, for 2026, we expect price increases and higher sales in the Chinese market thanks to a product specifically designed for that market. The company trades at demanding valuations due to its outstanding quality, growth, and profitability, but at current prices it trades at a 30% discount to its historical multiples, which we consider an opportunity.
